

The green dotted line is the number of events we would expect to see in the Far Detector based on extrapolating the number of events seen in the Near Detector. The black points are the number of events that we actually see. We see almost no events in the FD (compared to the ND expectation) because almost all of the muon neutrinos have oscillated away at the FD.